A week into relaxed lockdown, Centre stays on course to open

Though Covid-19 cases are doubling at a faster pace into the first week of the third phase of the lockdown, the general sentiment in the government appears to be against rolling back the relaxations towards a gradual un-lockdown. The nature of high-level meetings within the government and new advisories issued for Covid-19 management in the past fortnight testify to this.

At a time when everyone is awaiting an early end to the health and economic crisis caused by the global pandemic, the interests of labourers and workers are once again set to be sacrificed. The revival of business and economic activity after weeks of forced closure is indeed a key objective to be achieved.

The govt must make it clear that communally loaded comments will not be tolerated - Times of India

this story is from December 10, 2014

This episode shows how important signalling or messaging from the political and administrative leadership is. As things stand, the perception on the ground may be that communally loaded comments may create a furore but they are not necessarily a no-no.

The govt must either scrap or change Section 66A of the IT Act - Times of India

this story is from December 10, 2014

While the government's acknowledgement of this particular case as a misuse of Section 66A of the IT Act is welcome, it is difficult to accept its contention that the section itself is necessary. The truth is that in its current form it makes such misuse not just possible but probable.

India needs to recalibrate its covid policy to kickstart the economy

Policy - Economy - News - The Economic Times

Cement is a perfect barometer to gauge economic activity. On May 5, a day after India began a graded opening up in its fight against the scourge of the novel coronavirus, economic activity could be tracked by the movement of rakes carrying cement: 7 out of every 10 trains were chugging towards green and orange zones, bypassing the prosperous districts upon us.

Talking Point: Has the rescheduling of JEE/NEET affected students' preparation

Students have become callous The rescheduling of the exam has not only made students lose the rhythm of preparation but it has made it difficult for them to set a target and get back to studying again. With the uncertainty, students have become a bit callous about the preparation.

How technology has shaped the education sector during COVID-19

Things may have changed forever for the educational institutions of the country and the world. Many of us have taken bold steps to create what we are starting to know and refer to as the new normal now. Looking back to those early days of the COVID-19 lockdown, we started to realise how complex a task we had at our hands.

Boris Johnson to set out Covid-19 warning system in public address

Boris Johnson will unveil a new virus alert system, similar to how the government currently communicates terror threat levels, in Sunday's address to Britain that will set out some of the conditions for removing restrictions on the economy. The five-level alerts range from one (green), which would enable life to return to normal, to five (red).

How Bad Is Unemployment? 'Literally Off the Charts'

The American economy plunged deeper into crisis last month, losing 20.5 million jobs as the unemployment rate jumped to 14.7 percent, the worst devastation since the Great Depression. The Labor Department's monthly report on Friday provided the clearest picture yet of the breadth and depth of the economic damage - and how swiftly it spread - as the coronavirus pandemic swept the country.

U.S. unemployment rate soars to 14.7 percent, the worst since the Depression era

The U.S. unemployment rate jumped to 14.7 percent in April, the highest level since the Great Depression, as many businesses shut down or severely curtailed operations to try to limit the spread of the deadly coronavirus. The Labor Department said 20.5 million people abruptly lost their jobs, wiping out a decade of employment gains in a single month.
