Flying in times of a pandemic | HT Editorial

editorials Updated: May 24, 2020 19:18 IST After 60 days, India will fly again today. While there have been special flights to bring back stranded Indians, regular domestic flight operations have remained suspended ever since the national lockdown was imposed from March 25. There was sound logic - travel could lead to the spread of the disease.

The power of partnership

The power of partnership

Everybody agrees that we are living through unprecedented times. The nature and scale of the crisis which the COVID-19 pandemic has led to is unparalleled. In such a scenario, solutions are unlikely to come from past experiences or best practices. The biggest source of strength now is the partnerships we have built over the years.

A pandemic prescription

India is confronting two simultaneous crises. An economic crisis destroying our livelihoods and a health crisis which threatens our lives. The twin crises are deeply intertwined - our economy cannot be reopened without credibly addressing fears of infection and resurgence. The health crisis caused an economic crisis because people do not consume, work, or invest when there is visceral fear.
